Bnai Brith And Germany To Begin Youth Exchange Soon

A major American Jewish organization and the West German Government have set up an exchange program of youth leaders and human rights experts concerned with problems of democracy, says the New York Times. Details of the program, which begins July 25, were outlined by Label A. Katz, president of Bnai Brith, and Henry Schultz, national chairman of the Anti-Defamation League of Bnai Brith, which will carry out the program in the U.S.

The Jewish leaders, who made their announcement at the close of the League's national executive committee meeting at the Savoy-Hilton Hotel, in New York, declared that it was the first time an American Jewish agency "has embarked on an exchange program with West Germany."

"It involves," they said, "an exchange of trained Jewish community relations leaders and Bnai Brith youth workers concerned not only with education itself but with all aspects of civic affairs, citizenship, and democratic attitudes."

The first group of Bnai Brith specialists will leave for West Germany next month under the sponsorship of the West German Government. The exchange program was first proposed by Benjamin R. Epstein, national director of the league, and Nathan C. Belth, another official, during their visit to Germany last January to study attitudes toward democracy.

One of their recommendations to Foreign Minister Dr. Heinrich von Brentano was for the expansion of a "fruitful, informal, cultural exchange of civic leaders to reinforce democratic growth." The West German Foreign Office, Mr. Epstein said, accepted the idea as one means of facilitating understanding and developing mutual attitudes in the United States and Canada.

Dr. George Federer, German Consul General in New York, notified the League officials of the West German Government's desire to implement the plan as soon as possible, says the New York Times. Dr. Federer and Mr. Epstein were empowered to work out the details.

Mr. Epstein told the meeting: "The German youth and community leaders who come here will be able to see, at firsthand, the American system of voluntary association. They will learn how Americans, as private citizens — without Government-imposed edicts — organize and work together in behalf of their democratic beliefs through civic organizations ranging from Parent-Teacher Associations to civil rights groups."

Mr. Epstein said that "this system of voluntary association — coupled with the American tradition of freedom of religious expression — has been our great bulwark against the anti-Semitism that has plagued Germany in the past."

Wrote 22-Volume Thesis By Hand In 12 Years At Yeshiva U.

Moses Goodstein, a graduate student at Yeshiva University, in New York, has finally finished his thesis — after twelve years. It runs twenty-two hand-written volumes. He used hundreds of pencils and pens. His hand is still numb.

The subject of his 8,500-page effort, with which he hoped to earn his Ph.D. at Yeshiva's commencement on June 16, is Judah Ibn Quraish, an obscure — but important — North African Hebrew lexicographer, exegete and philologist who died in the tenth century.

Mr. Goodstein, a 48-year-old high school teacher of Hebrew, and a bachelor, told the New York Times that he had spent every spare moment during the last twelve years writing, rewriting, and translating the thesis in his one-room East Bronx apartment.

Judah Ibn Quraish, who is not listed in the Encyclopaedia Britannica, formulated, according to Mr. Goodstein, the laws of sound-change for the Semitic languages in "The Risala."

"The Risala," said Mr. Goodstein, "is a work of eighty-six pages and is believed to be the only surviving work of Quraish. The priceless manuscript is in the Bodleian Library in Oxford, and I had a photostat made of it. Then I translated Quraish's Arabic text into Hebrew."

"Quraish's 'Risala' shows that certain words are found in the Old Testament that may be compared to some Arabic and Aramaic words. This is significant when you remember that, in the Hebrew Bible, there are many words whose meanings we do not know. Now we may compare them to similar words in Arabic and Aramaic."

"For instance, in Chapter 12, Verse 12, of Ecclesiastes, there is the word 'lahag.' This word is found only once in the whole Bible. Its meaning is not known. But, by comparing it with the Arabic, we know that 'lahag' means reading."

Just how Mr. Goodstein managed to write twenty-two volumes on a work that took only eighty-six pages was, he said, easy. "I could have done more," he said at Yeshiva. "I think the twenty-two volumes are not enough. This is the kind of work that would take a lifetime."

Mr. Goodstein's work includes some biographical writings on Quraish's life, and interpretation of his work, his influence and his logic, says the New York Times. Officials at Yeshiva were not surprised when Mr. Goodstein had unloaded the twenty-two-volume thesis on them, for they'd known for some time of his endeavor. They did say that the average length of a thesis for a Ph.D. was one volume. Mr. Goodstein's hope for the future is to find someone to type it.

Japanese Convert Took Faith Of Jews He Rescued

A Japanese descendant of a line of Shinto priests that served the Imperial household for a thousand years took over the pulpit of an Orthodox synagogue and told why he had become a Jew.

Dr. Abraham S. Kotsuji, himself related to the royal family of Japan, described at the East Fifty-first Street Synagogue, in New York, how he had saved thousands of Jewish refugees stranded in Japan at the outbreak of World War II, says the New York Times. In befriending these people and sharing their torments, he gained the conviction to adopt their faith, the 60-year-old convert declared.

Wearing the traditional prayer shawl and skull cap of Judaism, Dr. Kotsuji told of his "torments" at the hands of the Japanese secret police. "Throughout the ordeal," he said, "my belief in One Lord our God, the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, remained unshaken."

Thousands of Jews who had fled from Poland before the Nazi invasion were saved from arrest in Japan by Dr. Kotsuji, who participated in underground work. By the time Japan declared war on the United States he had succeeded in getting for many of the Jews visas to the United States, Canada, South America, and Australia.

During the war years he wrote a history of the Jews to answer the growing Nazi-inspired anti-Semitism in Japan. As a result of the book, which sold out in one month, Dr. Kotsuji said he was placed on the assassination list of the secret police in 1945. He fled to Manchuria a few months before the war ended.

Dr. Kotsuji told the congregation that his conversion last year before the rabbinate in Jerusalem was "a matter of gradual growth and not a sudden mysterious revelation." His conversion, he explained, was the climax of a lifetime study of Jewish law and traditions that began in Kyoto when he was 13. He had discovered a translation of the Old Testament in a second-hand bookshop.

A.J.C. Opposes Religious Tests For Candidates

The American Jewish Congress took a strong stand against applying "religious tests" to candidates for the Presidency or any other public office. A resolution adopted at its recent biennial convention in New York declared that the voter who is guided by the religious affiliation of a candidate in casting his ballot "subverts, at least indirectly, the constitutional principle of separation of church and state and the ban on religious test for public office."

Though the resolution did not name any candidate, says the New York Times, delegates made it clear that it was prompted by the controversy over the candidacy of Senator John F. Kennedy, a Roman Catholic, for the Democratic nomination for President. The resolution was one of eleven major policy statements adopted by the 800 delegates to the five-day national convention held at the Statler-Hilton Hotel, in New York.

The resolution on religion of political candidates affirmed the voter's right "to question any candidate for public office on his position in regard to issues of importance, including the separation of church and state . . . and to examine his record of actions and expressions on such issues."

"But when the questions have been answered and the examination has been made," the statement continued, "the voter should cast his ballot for or against the candidate on the basis of the answers and the record."

In other major resolutions the delegates did the following: Called for a central body to coordinate the activities of Jewish organizations and to serve as "an authoritative spokesman for the American Jewish community." Supported Federal aid to education, except for parochial schools and public school districts that refused to comply with the Supreme Court's 1954 school integration decision, says the New York Times. Expressed concern over continuing incidents of anti-Semitism in Germany and the Soviet Union and accused the Eisenhower Administration of "indifference" to the banning of American Jewish soldiers and civilians from some Arab countries.

World Leader Sees New Phase Of Old Problem Of Anti-Semitism

A leader of the World Jewish Congress appealed to world-wide Jewish groups and communities "to keep alive" the demand for equality of treatment toward the Jewish minority in the Soviet Union and its satellites. Dr. Israel Goldstein, vice president of the international organization, declared that the Jews in these countries should be free "to preserve and cultivate their religious and cultural heritage." He added:

"Let us do what we can to strengthen the morale of our fellow Jews in the Communist orbit by endeavoring to get through to them, by all available means, the knowledge that we have not forgotten them," says the New York Times. He spoke before 600 delegates attending the biennial convention of the American Jewish Congress at the Statler-Hilton Hotel, in New York.

Dr. Goldstein, who is identified with the Zionist movement, described the Middle East situation as "a depressing commentary on the state of international morality." Citing the reaction of the Western powers — including the United States — to the United Arab Republic's refusal to permit ships trading with Israel to go through the Suez Canal, he said:

"Yet this should not discourage Jews, wherever they are free to speak up, from doing so in the name of international justice until their just plea is heard. Should Americans condemn themselves to second-class citizenship by refraining from urging their Government to do what is morally right for fear lest they be called pressure groups?"

Dr. Goldstein called attention to the pending trial of Adolf Eichmann, accused of the murder of 6,000,000 Jews during the Hitler regime. He held that the trial in Israel would have "a salutary effect" in reminding the German people and the world of the horrors of the Nazi era. He warned that "anti-Semitism and Nazism have apparently been rescued from the underworld and are once more credible possibilities in the world."

"It would have been unthinkable ten years ago that Nazism could again become a popular fad on any level of society," he went on. "Today, however, we seem to be entering a new phase of the problem, in which there is considerable receptivity to anti-Semitism even in those societies we had thought were immune to its spread."

In another address, says the New York Times, Rabbi Max Nussbaum, of Hollywood, Calif., a vice president of the American Jewish Congress, urged that a distinction must be made between the German Government, which he said was "sincerely committed to the eradication of anti-Semitism," and a large number of the German people "who still harbor the old anti-Jewish hostility."

"In the next ten years," he said, "we must press for deeds instead of promises and analyze every step the German Government is taking, watching the results carefully, until we can feel assured as Jews that Germany can take its rightful place in the society of Western nations."

In Search Of Ancient Man

BY RUTH CALE

In the world literature on general pre-history there is probably no work which fails to mention Palestine, and in particular those parts of it which are now modern Israel. For remains of early Man have been found in many areas of the country, together with his tools and other paraphernalia which are invaluable in reconstructing the evolution of the human species. The search for prehistoric relics goes on all the time, and a veritable treasure trove has been accumulated in the course of the years, most of it by Dr. Moshe Stekalis, Professor of Prehistory at the Hebrew University. Prof. Stekalis has lost count of the wealth stored in the small building which, set amid high trees and gardens in Jeru-salem's German Colony, houses the University's Department of Prehistory, complete with library and museum.

Finds range from the beginnings of prehistory until the period when the archaeologists take over, that is, in Prof. Stekalis' words, "from about a million years ago, when man started making tools and discovered fire, until the Bronze Age" (about 3,000 B.C.E.). Some of the finds, unfortunately, have remained in the Rockefeller Museum, now in the Jordanian part of Jerusalem, where Prof. Stekalis kept his collection while the Hebrew University was still on Mount Scopus; others are on show in the small museum in his department.

"Israel is a prehistorian's paradise," maintains Prof. Stekalis. "While in the whole world altogether one hundred Neanderthal skulls have been found, here alone twenty-six have been dug up. There are two possible explanations for this: either this country was an important crossroads throughout the ages, or else the prehistorians here have been extraordinarily busy." Skulls were found in caves in Upper Galilee, on Mount Carmel, and near Nazareth. Earliest finds come from the Jordan Valley. They include elephant and rhinoceros bones of Palaeolithic age, hand-axes made of basaltic lava. But the museum does not include finds only: there is also demonstration material, such as charts and models, to serve students of prehistory.

"The Carmel Man hunted," said the professor as he explained the many exhibits. "He collected food, mainly barley and berries, meat and fish. Life centred round the fire in the middle of the cave, the warmest and best lit spot. The ancients also buried their dead near the fire-places, and when they picked themselves up and wandered off elsewhere, they took the remains of their dead along. They used flint flakes to work with, turned them into knives, points, arrowheads, scrapers and saws, and with them they cut meat, made wooden tools, and other objects."

There are flints galore in the museum, most of which look more or less similar to the layman, but to the prehistorian no two are alike. With sharply pointed flints the ancient man (or woman?) "sowed" garments, using them to pierce holes in skins or weaves and then pushing string through the holes. Israel is full of flint, and the observant hiker can easily find worked pieces, though often they may be bits which the cave-man did not pass as perfect and tossed away.

That the ancients were skilled artists can be inferred from the fact that the museum includes lovely "jewellery", with designs not much different from what modern stores sell today, except that for precious stones they used shells or finely cut animal bones (one necklace is made of gazelles' toes). With infinite patience they banged holes into round rock pieces with hammers made of elephant bones; with picks they made stone pots, almost as even as vessels made of clay. And that the cave-women coloured their fingernails, Prof. Stekalis deduces from the widespread use of ochre, a natural colouring material which is found in many parts of the country.

Prehistory has been Prof. Stekalis' profession and hobby ever since his youth. Born in a small town in Russia, he studied classical archaeology at Odessa University, but early on found it "dull" and switched to prehistory. Then in the 'twenties, a convinced Zionist, he came to Palestine, and

IN MEMORIAM

SCHWARTZ: In loving memory of our dear mother, Mrs. Anna Wise Schwartz, who passed away on Sivan 23, 1958.

We lost a mother with a heart of gold,
Who was more to us than wealth untold.
Without farewell, she fell asleep.
We have lost, but God has gained.
One of the best mothers the world contained.
For we never knew a heartache,
Till we saw her vacant chair.

Sadly missed by husband, Joseph; and daughters, Jean, Claire, Bella, Sayra; and sons-in-law; and grandchildren.

CARDS OF THANKS

FELDMAN: The brothers of the late Mrs. Freda Cohen Feldman, of Miami, Florida, wish to express their thanks to their many relatives and friends for their kind expressions of sympathy shown them during their recent bereavement. Lou and Irwin Cohen.

IN SEARCH OF ANCIENT MAN

(Continued from Page Three) the Hebrew University, the prehistory course is compulsory for archaeology students, but many geology and geography students take it as a minor subject, while a few have also chosen it as a major. In Israel, however, interest in prehistory extends beyond academic circles. Several kibbutzim (settlements), such as Shaar ha-Golan, Mayan Barukh, Alumot, and Mishmar ha-Negav, have their own prehistoric museums with valuable collections. There are many amateurs, and these usually send their finds to Prof. Stekela.

BETH TZEDEK

Synagogue dinner in honour of Dr. Louis Finkelstein, Chancellor of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, in New York, heard the announcement that an Associate Professorship in Jewish history was being created by a group of Seminary friends who were subscribing $150,000 to the Seminary for this purpose. The history professorship is named for the Rabbi, Dr. Stuart E. Rosenberg, in perpetuity. J. Barney Goldfarb is chairman of the Seminary affairs committee of Beth Tzedek. Dr. Finkelstein expressed confidence in the future of Canadian Jewry. He also charged that the American community, both general and Jewish, is so preoccupied with the attainment of material things that it has to a large extent watered down its educational system and abandoned the search for spiritual and moral truths. It was his opinion that Canadian Jewry now has a sterling opportunity to provide the leadership. He hoped that Canadian Jewry would, within the next decade, provide a Jewish center of learning which would provide the opportunity to train leaders here. Samuel Lunenfeld and J. Irving Gelbaum were presented with Seminary Awards. Albert Shifrin, G.C., president of the congregation, was dinner chairman. The signing of a scroll took place on a machine which projected the signature during the signing. The scrolls were presented to the following who donated endowments: J. Irving Gelbaum, S. Is Justice Possible for Eichmann?

The New York Herald Tribune says:

That Israel seized and transported Adolf Eichmann by illegal means is a fact beyond doubt. That Eichmann is the man who engineered and directed the deaths of millions of men, women and children in Nazi-occupied Europe is a fact equally well-established. So in judging the rights and wrongs of his removal from Argentina to Israel, one comes squarely against the unpleasant dilemma of having to make a choice between the rules of legality and the demands of justice, which may not be always identical.

Nor is this the only question raised. Even more perplexing is the problem of who should try Eichmann. That he should be tried and punished is, we believe, beyond doubt. His indeed were crimes against humanity, for he was no subordinate carrying out orders but a principal architect of the extermination of Jews which took millions of guiltless lives. To let such a monstrous man go free once he has been identified and his culpability established is unthinkable. But who shall be charged with the task of retribution?

The Israelis' argument that they should be so charged is a strong one, not only because it was the blood of their kinsmen that Eichmann shed, but because they were the ones who cared deeply enough to track him down and bring him to the bar. Bitter though the memories, the Eichmann proceedings are being handled in a civilized manner in Israel, and if he is prosecuted there the trial will be scrupulously honest.

An impressive case can be made, too, for trying him in Germany, scene of his crimes. Many West Germans are ready to do so. But might not East Germany enter a claim just as logical as West Germany's, thereby introducing another diplomatic complication into a situation already tangled enough? And would it be altogether to the Germans' good to revive the divisions and stir up the recriminations inevitable in a full-dress war crimes trial?

Ideally, the situation would be to try Eichmann before an international tribunal — a reconstitution of the Nuremberg court, which undoubtedly would have convicted him years ago had he not escaped to Argentina. But the practical difficulties of reassembling such a court are enormous — nor should it be forgotten that the Communist states which would have to be represented would do all they could to turn Eichmann's trial to their own uses.

As we have said, these are difficult questions upon which conscientious men may differ. But above them all rises the certainty that Eichmann must face the judgment of mankind. We, too, could wish that he had not been taken as he was; we could also wish that it had not been left to the Israelis to bring him to book. But justice, like God Himself, sometimes moves in a mysterious way.

The Great Concept Of Helping People Of All Creeds To A New Life

EXCERPTS FROM THE ADDRESS OF MURRAY I. GURFEL, OF NEW YORK, PRESIDENT OF UNITED HIAS SERVICE, TO THE JEWISH IMMIGRANT AID SERVICE, AT THE WINDSON HOTEL, IN MONTREAL

The immigrant of today is as sturdy as the immigrant of yesterday. He will contribute much to any national society that gives him the opportunity. He will adapt himself to the ways of the receiving country and his children will transmit to their children the national pattern of culture. The history of immigration has shown that integration follows the opportunity for integration. The immigrant, generally considered a liability upon arrival, inevitably becomes a community asset. Let us not falter then in our work or in our approaches to governments, for we have the hallmark of a richly endowed history behind our efforts.

World Refugee Year is of symbolic significance. It affirms the concern of the world community for the problem of the refugee. And even though its immediate results may hardly seem adequate, there is enormous significance in the expression of an international morality binding upon the conscience of individual nations. We shall never again see completely free movements of people. But, within the framework of the possible, there is much to be done. The climate of hospitable public opinion must constantly be nurtured.

World-wide organizations must remain at their posts to further the possibility of migration and to seize the opportunities of matching the exit permit with the entry visa. United Hias Service stands in that position of alertness. Jias, Jewish Immigrant Aid Service, stands there at our side. The dedicated workers of these organizations, both lay and professional, will see to it that any Jew who has half a chance to migrate will get a whole chance if he wishes it.

I wish to pay tribute to the Canadian Government for its understanding help in the matter of immigration. The great nation of Canada, like my own great country, was built by immigrants. Your achievements are many and the spirit of your institutions stands as a beacon light for underdeveloped countries of the world. Your government was among the first to accept Hungarian refugees when the revolt and exodus from that country took place. It has steadily permitted a flow of immigrants.

We in United Hias Service are proud to have you, our colleagues of Jias and the Canadian Jewish Congress so greatly in the forefront of this liberal movement.

"In-A-Hurry" Driver Is Campaign Target

The motorist who risks his own safety and the safety of others trying to make time in traffic will be hit by safety groups all over North America this summer. This familiar road nuisance is the target for the continent-wide "Slow Down and Live" campaign, sponsored in Canada by the Canadian Highway Safety Council. Provincial and state organizations in Canada, the United States and Puerto Rico, guided by the Association of State and Provincial Safety Co-ordinators, plan an all-out campaign to bring back to highway travel some of the fun and pleasure it once had. One of the ways to do it, they believe, is the elimination of the motorist who calls on every wile he knows to get where he is going as fast as he can, regardless of the rights or safety of others. This driver's selfishness can result in anything from ruffled tempers to death in traffic, the Council warns. Participation in the annual "Slow Down and Live" campaign is promised by federal, provincial and municipal governments, and police, and by industry, service and fraternal organizations, women's groups and many more. They will use the drive's 1960 slogan: "Highway Safety Can Make Driving Fun."

voluntary agencies. Protestant and Catholic, to aid their co-religionists. But each of us speaks broadly for the great concept of helping people of all creeds to a new and better life. The process of immigration and re-settlement is often akin to the process of rebirth. To the families we help it often means a new life. It is literally as if they had been born again. May Canada continue to participate generously in this process of bringing worthy immigrants to a new life in a country dedicated to the principles of freedom and opportunity.

BNAI BRITH AND GERMANY

He pointed out that League materials on democracy and inter-group relations had already gained acceptance in Germany.

Mr. Epstein said that the first delegation of ten representatives of the League and Bnai Brith would participate in seminars and meetings with German officials and youth and community leaders in Bonn, Düsseldorf, Berlin, and other cities. German communal and youth leaders will come to America at a later date, he said.

Although many people in Canada today are protected through immunization, the immunizing qualities may have waned to a dangerous level in some of these persons through lack of obtaining necessary booster shots. Others lack any immunization at all, relying on the immunization of others to prevent spread of disease. To show that we are not immune as a nation, witness the case of the large city in Western Canada, only two scant years ago, when diphtheria broke out, attacking 69, killing 6. Both deaths and cases were restricted to an area where diphtheria toxoid had been ignored.
